

WESTERN SOCIETY WOMEN IN TOMBS AS SHOPLIFTERS

Said to Be Daughters of Supreme Court Justice, One a Battleship's Sponsor.

Following the refusal of three Special Sessions Justices to permit a department store detective to withdraw a charge of shoplifting this afternoon, two women prisoners who had been arrested and admitted to jail under the names of Elizabeth and Mary Brown broke down and admitted that their real names were Mrs. Grace Smith and Miss Pearl Agnes Weller, and that they were sisters and daughters of a wealthy and distinguished Westerner.

Not in the least moved by the mention of the standing of the expensively dressed women, the Justices committed them to the Tombs pending arraignment for sentence Friday. On their way to the Tombs both prisoners collapsed and became hysterical and for two hours thereafter the telephones of the Special Sessions Justices and of Assistant District Attorney Wilmet were kept busy with calls by those interested in an effort to free the shoplifters.

CASE ATTRACTED LITTLE ATTENTION IN POLICE COURT.

The case of the "Brown" sisters had attracted little attention in the police court. The address they gave was No. 28 St. Nicholas avenue. They had waived examination and the case had come down in Special Sessions. Leon Kaufman appeared as their counsel.

Pending an arraignment in the higher court Lawyer Kaufman had been busy—so busy that when the case was called this afternoon Justices Redden, Salmon and Mayo were informed by John F. Larkin, store detective for B Altman & Co., that he desired to withdraw the charge that the prisoners had stolen $21 worth of lace the afternoon of Jan. 16.

"If you will permit," said Larkin, "we will not press the charge." The Justices would not permit. The young prisoners were informed they must either plead guilty or be tried. Their counsel pleaded guilty for them, whereat the announcement was made that the Misses Brown would be locked up in the Tombs until Friday, when they would be arraigned for sentence.

THEN THEY CONFESSED THEIR REAL NAMES.

Lawyer Kaufman protested and the prisoners whimpered. They confessed that they were not the Misses Brown, but Miss Weller, twenty-seven years old, and Mrs. Smith, thirty-seven years old.

After they had been taken to the Tombs their lawyer rushed out of the building. He had not been gone long when rumors began to filter in that the two prisoners were wealthy and of social importance. It was said one of the pair had a lot on at the Hotel Plaza this afternoon.

Another rumor was that they were daughters of a Western Supreme Court Justice; that the younger of the pair had been sponsor at the christening of a battleship.

Then came the telephone bombardment in the interest of the prisoners, but without avail. Assistant District Attorney Wilmet refused to tell what he knew of the mysterious pair, who are still in the Tombs.
